

SELF-EMPLOYED

Being self-employed can sometimes present speed bumps when applying for a mortgage. Business owners sometimes find it difficult to prove income and the stability of that income for future years.

Because of this, self-employed individuals sometimes looks like they are poor credit risks. When the truth is their employment situation is more stable than an individual who works for an employer.

The good news is there are lenders who are offering mortgage programs for self-employed individuals allowing them to financing their primary residence and in some cases their recreation properties.

It's never been easier for self-employed individuals to obtain a mortgage, and Bonnie Telep can sit down with you to explain all your options.
